

America at the Crossroads

Are we prepared to live in the same world with China?

October 4, 1965 Pope Paul VI speaking at the United Nations says we must "study the right method of uniting to your pact of brotherhood, in honor and dignity those who do not yet share in it".

In recent months more and more Americans have been calling for:
Intensified efforts for a negotiated settlement in Vietnam
U.S. recognition of China
Admission of China to the U.N.

Collision course

The United States and China are on a collision course. Each government offers its people a caricature of the other as argument that common membership in the U. N. is unthinkable. Four American administrators have followed a policy of hostility. Eminent figures both in and out of Government have broadcast vituperative attacks on China often with little attempt to discriminate between detestable, acceptable and laudable developments in China. The Chinese authorities have similarly labelled the U. S. as international public enemy number 1, with comparable lack of discrimination.

China feels herself surrounded by hostile and dangerous forces, and it may be these circumstances as much as Maoist revolutionary doctrine that have produced the shrill cries from Peking, and a determination on the part of the Chinese to

The following Yale faculty and students signing this advertisement endorse only its contents and are not necessarily connected with any organization. The use of titles and the name of the university is for identification only.

October 13, 1965 Senator Robert F. Kennedy recommends that "the United States explore new avenues of approach to the question of Communist China".

Those who favor a reappraisal of American policy in the Far East are not necessarily opposed to that policy in its entirety. The U. S. must, and will, defend its legitimate interests, but what must still remain open to public debate is the way these interests should be conceived and defended.

develop offensive weapons, including a nuclear capability. It may also be these circumstances that lie behind recent pronouncements that Peking is no longer interested in U. N. membership. If the present impasse continues, these cries may be translated sooner or later into further action.

First step to peace

Negotiations between the U. S. and China could be tedious and painful, but the first step—admission to the U. N.—is long and dangerously overdue. China's admission could have been much more easily undertaken and with greater hope of success at a time when the Peking authorities appeared to seek communication with us. Today the Chinese response is unpredictable, but we must no longer delay beginning a determined and realistic effort to bridge the gap. We must support November 15, 1965 U. S. State Department admits having rejected Hanoi peace feelers in 1964.

November 17, 1965 U. S. blocks the seating of the People's Republic of China.

"Will the world be marginally safer with Communist China inside the U. N., or excluded from it? Does it make sense to exclude from the only existing world peace-keeping organization a regime that governs however badly—one-fourth of the human race?"

U. N. Secretary General Thant put the point in his annual report to the Assembly: "Both the Vietnam situation and the disarmament impasse point once again to the imperative need for the United Nations to achieve universality of membership as soon as possible."

New York Times, editorial, Veterans Day, 1965

the effort of our allies, of our neutral friends, and of the less bellicose members of the increasingly polycentric communist bloc to make the U. N. a world-wide forum. We believe with Thant that the world will be a safer place when the delegates of the United States and the People's Republic of China are denouncing each other on the East River. We also believe that by degrees mutual threats can give way to mutual accommodation in many areas of potential mutual benefits.

We call for nation-wide reappraisal of our Far Eastern policy. Will you join us in trying to make the world at least "marginally safer"? Money, writers, speakers, and interested people willing to work are all needed.
